

The Artemis Water Tech Top 50, a not-for-profit collaborative initiative, is seeking interns for the 2012 Artemis Water Tech Top 50 from 15 June through 15 September.

BACKGROUND

Each year, the Artemis Top 50 recognizes the most promising water technology start-ups--more detail at <http://artemistop50.com/>.

At the Artemis Project, we welcome the opportunity to work with dedicated individuals who share our passion for market-driven water efficiency and environmental sustainability. This opportunity will put you at the heart of the emerging water tech industry. It will connect you to a global network of investors and executives. We are looking for self-motivated, diligent, passionate candidates who will thrive in this atmosphere.

INTERNSHIP

We are looking for someone with an interest in both business and water resources management. Recent graduates of undergraduate environmental business or science programs are the most likely candidates, but the position is open to capable and insightful candidates who have relevant experience in an emerging field.

Artemis Water Research Fellows will research and reach out to relevant water tech companies for the Top 50 Competition, and support the evaluations of the judging panel.

Responsibilities

- Build and maintain the Artemis Project database
- Research relevant industry trends
- Inform companies about the Artemis Project Top 50 and encourage them to apply
- Review applications from water tech start-ups
- Be a liaison between for the Artemis Top 50 and applicants

SKILLS AND EXPERIENCE

- Strong outreach skills
- Ability to digest and organize large amounts of information
- Ability to work independently
- Strong critical thinking skills
- Clear and concise writing skills
- Efficient time-management skills
- Ability to clearly verbalize and present research
- Superb attention to detail while maintaining 'big picture' perspective
